IDEAL FOR
First-Timers, Couples, Families

Tadoba is the quick answer to a question we are asked often: is there a tiger reserve that can be done properly in a long weekend? Three hours from Nagpur, in the geographical centre of the country, it is Maharashtra's oldest and largest national park and one of the best tiger habitats in India: teak forest, bamboo groves and a string of lakes, in the kind of landscape often said to have inspired The Jungle Book.

This short version is built for first-time wildlife travellers and for anyone whose dates will not stretch: two nights at a jungle resort on the park's edge, three safaris with a naturalist, and enough time between them to sit still. It combines easily with the rest of central India, and we build it into longer journeys as often as we sell it on its own.

Journey Highlights

- Fly into Nagpur, the geographical centre of India, and be inside Maharashtra's oldest and largest national park by the afternoon.
- Track tigers on three safaris (two in the core zone at dawn and dusk, one in the buffer) in a reserve with one of the highest tiger densities in the country.
- Watch for what shares the forest with them: leopards, sloth bears, gaur, wild dogs and the birdlife along the Telia and Tadoba lakes.
- Sit with the resort naturalists for a nature interpretation session, and learn what the pugmarks and alarm calls meant that morning.
- Add a boat on the Irai backwaters at sunset, a walk with the Gond communities of the buffer villages, or a campfire under a sky with no city near it.
- Return to Nagpur through orange orchards and cotton fields, with the option of a city stop at Deekshabhoomi and Futala Lake before your flight.

Day 01 Nagpur: Into the Forest

Drive · about 140 km, 3 to 3½ hours

Land at Nagpur's Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar International Airport and drive south-east through Vidarbha, a countryside of orange orchards and cotton fields, into the Tadoba-Andhari Tiger Reserve. It is Maharashtra's oldest and largest national park (teak forest, bamboo and a chain of lakes), and the resorts sit right on its edge. Check in, and if the timing works, take an evening safari in the buffer zone; if not, the resort's resident naturalists run an interpretation session that is the right way to begin.

Day 02 Tadoba: Two Safaris and the Hours Between

Out before sunrise into the core zone, which is where the reserve's tigers are most often seen, and where leopard, sloth bear, gaur and dhole (the Indian wild dog) share the ground. The guides track by pugmark and by the alarm calls of langur and deer, and the lakes at Telia and Tadoba are as good for birds as for anything larger. Back to the resort for lunch and the hot hours, then out again in the late afternoon, when the forest changes register entirely. Two drives in one day is the point of coming: it doubles the chances, and it shows you the same forest twice.

Day 03 Tadoba: A Last Drive and the Road Home

Drive · about 140 km to Nagpur

One more morning safari for a last look, then breakfast and the drive back to Nagpur for your onward flight or train. With a later departure there is time for Nagpur itself: the Deekshabhoomi monument, Futala Lake, and the orange markets the city is named for.

Practical notes

Getting there

Nagpur (NAG) is the nearest airport and railhead, with direct flights from Delhi, Mumbai, Bengaluru and most major cities. The park is about three hours by road.

Best time to visit

October to June. April and May are hot but give the best sightings, as the animals come to water. The core zone closes for the monsoon from July to September.

Sightings

Tadoba has one of the highest tiger densities in India, and three drives give a real chance. Nobody can promise a tiger, and we never will. The forest is worth the trip regardless.

Pace

Moderate. Safaris start before dawn and the afternoons are for resting, so the days are early rather than long.
